To whom it may concern,

My name is Nathanael Kenzler, and I am a first-generation college student pursuing a Master of Science in Marketing after completing my undergraduate degree in Business Administration at the University of Arizona. I am writing to share insight into who I am as a professional: how I work, how I learn, and the direction I am building toward. I am drawn to roles where I can contribute within a high-performing communications or marketing team while expanding my skills in ways that make the work around me more effective.

I approach every role with the same mindset, focused on learning often and thoroughly, thinking critically, and raising the standard of the work around me. My experience across marketing support, client-facing projects, and team coordination has given me a practical understanding of how businesses function. Whether supporting team projects under pressure, coordinating with stakeholders, or contributing to brand and go-to-market efforts, I have consistently taken on responsibility and sought challenges rather than avoiding them.

One of my core strengths is critical thinking and using it to break down complex ideas into clear narratives. I am comfortable learning technical concepts and organizing them to create alignment across audiences. This has helped me build trust with colleagues and clients, support stronger decisions, and contribute in environments where clarity drives outcomes. It is a huge part of what draws me to communications and marketing, where strategy, communication, and execution intersect. This is where my adaptability and work ethic allow me to thrive in fast-paced settings.

Outside formal roles, I am deliberately building toward a specific niche in AI-driven marketing. This means developing the judgment to know where AI creates real leverage and where it does not, alongside the ability to design and prototype the systems themselves. This past year I jumped in head first across several projects and courses to see firsthand what these systems look like behind the curtain, with more in development. My goal is to be the person who identifies the right problems, envisions a buildable solution, and engages credibly with the people bringing it to life, while being grounded marketing and business use cases from the beginning.

I am motivated by high standards, continuous improvement, and contributing value beyond any single role. I aim to make a meaningful impact through outcomes, on teams, and on the people those efforts ultimately support. Thank you for your time and consideration. I look forward to discussing how my mindset and skills could support your team.

Until Then,

Nathanael Kenzler
